ROYAL ALBERT WHARF

Royal Docks through time

Once a great centre for shipbuilding and the maritime industry, the Royal Docks has undergone a complete transformation over the past fifteen years. Propelled by huge investment and a bold vision, one of Europe's most ambitious urban development projects has turned the former dock buildings and land into exciting places to live, work and play.

At the eastern end of the Royal Docks, Royal Albert Wharf is a development of more than 1,500 award-winning homes in a desirable waterfront setting. This final phase of 238 new homes will add to a thriving waterside community that has retained the characterful and creative spirit of its past.

NEIGHBOURHOOD

A PLACE TO PUT DOWN ROOTS

Royal Albert Wharf is connected to everything you need to make your life work. You'll find shops, restaurants and a café on the doorstep, as well as a future nursery and local gym. A network of riverside play parks and gardens, conceived as London Garden Squares, link Royal Albert Wharf's neighbourhoods to the Thames riverside walk. Several schools, London's largest retail park and the University of East London are all just a short walk away.

In recent years, the wider Royal Albert district has developed a fast-growing reputation as a cultural and creative hub. The neighbourhood's rich history and waterside setting continues to attract a new generation of artists and entrepreneurs alongside Londoners looking for great value and more space.

NEIGHBOUR

Charlie Barista, Resident, Londoner

The Well Bean Co. at Royal Albert Wharf was born when local entrepreneur Charlie Claydon brought together his two big passions – making vegan chocolate and promoting mental health. Charlie set up the enterprise several years ago with support from NHG Homes and local charity, Bow Arts. He was looking for new premises to expand the fledgling chocolate factory he was running from his garden shed, and was keen to help create a focal point for the community that everyone could benefit from.

Fast-forward to today and Charlie has grown the business from two small chocolate-making machines into a thriving café that’s one of the most popular destinations at the Royal Docks. As well as serving up a tempting plant-based menu, the welcoming space doubles as a hub for public events and activities. Charlie’s chocolate workshops are always a big hit, and he often collaborates with local charities to support mental health initiatives at the café.

The latest exciting venture for the Well Bean Co. is a partnership with local teachers that aims to enhance wellbeing. Every week, the teachers run donation-based meditation and ‘kindful yoga’ classes at the café. Charlie would also love to make the space fully accessible with a stair lift. He’s passionate about continuing to grow and connect the local community, with plenty more plans for the Well Bean Co. in the future.

COMMUNITY

Building a strong community with Bow Arts

Established in 1994, Bow Arts is an education arts charity that provides affordable workspace for more than 400 artists at 13 studio sites across London, including 40 spaces at Royal Albert Wharf. In partnership with NHG Homes, the charity delivers an exciting placemaking programme of events, exhibitions and workshops centred around a community arts hub.

One of the success stories of the space is a group of artists that came together to form a collective called Art in the Docks. Supported by Bow Arts, this dynamic community of creators from all ages and backgrounds exhibits everything from painting and printmaking, to fashion and textile design, to photography and performance art in various locations around the Royal Docks.

An especially popular event from the Bow Arts programme is the annual Winter Market at Pump House Square, where local residents are invited to come and take part in festive art workshops, sample delicious street food, and shop for gifts and crafts made by the wonderful community of local artists.

Bow Arts also recently partnered with The V&A to create two Artist Fellowships at Royal Albert Wharf. One of the artists, Adam Moore, curated a public programme of events called Loose Ends, a series of free workshops that invited people to come and explore the places, ecologies and materials of the Royal Docks.

“Bow Arts plays an important role here facilitating new business ventures, and we’ve shown how it’s possible to build a strong sense of community in a new place.”

RESIDENTS AT ROYAL ALBERT WHARF SINCE 2021

NATE & BIANCA

Nate and Bianca moved into their one-bedroom apartment at Royal Albert Wharf in April 2021. Before buying, Nate spent six years renting across London. Nate works in cyber security at Canary Wharf, and Bianca has a career in events in Woolwich.

The two made the decision to put down permanent roots in east London, which gave them the benefit of an easier commute to work alongside outdoor space, a riverside location and a tranquil setting away from the busyness of the city while still being a stone's throw from central London.

"Buying a house is a big deal, and the NHG Homes sales team made every moment as easy as possible. It was probably the best experience of buying a house you could possibly have. We looked at quite a lot of properties but struggled to find a home that ticked all our boxes. We wanted to find somewhere that gave us access to open space, fresh air and was close to the Thames, as well as giving us shorter journeys to work. Royal Albert Wharf was the perfect fit.

I also fly frequently for work – travelling to Heathrow or Gatwick was such a pain and added hours onto each journey, but now City Airport is very convenient and perfect for business travel. Knowing you're half an hour from your front door when you land makes a big difference.

We're working much more flexibly now and so it was important to have a nice home environment for work as well as access to the office. This is the best of both – we have lovely views over the river and peace and quiet when needed but can also pop into the office at short notice.

Bianca says, When we first came to view the property, we walked in the door and it was by far the best place that we'd seen. I could picture us living in here immediately and plan out where everything was going to go – it was such an easy decision to make.

Normally in London there's a trade-off between price, commuting distance and neighbourhood, but at Royal Albert Wharf, we didn't need to compromise like we would have needed to do in other areas."
